In the introduction to 'Escape from Camp 14', the author Blaine Harden tells us that there are some serious inconsistencies in the story contained within. He says that Shin Dong-hyuk has changed the story he told when he first escaped, but explains that Shin didn't want to look so bad and didn't want people to initially know that some of the things he had done in the camp were pretty much unforgivable.

Shin maintains that his January 2005 escape from Camp 14 occurred as described in this book, noting that the extraordinary scars on his legs were caused by that camp's high-voltage electric fence. But some details of his escape differ from what he has said before: He was motivated to escape, he now says, because he had been informed that he was scheduled to be executed in February of that year.

Escape from Camp 14 is the most devastating book I have ever read. Perhaps the resilience of youth got me through the aftermath of learning about slavery, the Holocaust, even Iris Chang's now-classic The Rape of Nanking: The Forgotten Holocaust, the title I previously held as the most horrific testimony of inhumanity.. More recently, I cried through 2010 National Book Award nonfiction ...
